

FRIDAY REWIND – FARGO, GREY’S ANATOMY, AND MORE

May 9th, 2014 By Jovel Johnson

Welcome to the Friday Rewind. Take a look back (or catch up) on some of your favorite shows (or guilty pleasures) from Monday to Thursday. Here we go:

Monday

Warehouse 13 (SyFy)

“Savage Seduction”

Pete is reunited with his ex-girlfriend, Kelly, who comes to them for help. Her grandmother’s TV is possessed. When they get to Grandma’s house to investigate, they see she’s in the TV...in a telenovella that’s been cancelled. Then the cat gets caught up in the telenovella too. Something’s obviously going on with the TV (there’s some kind of purple light emanating from it).

In trying to stop Kelly from going too close to the TV, Myka falls into the show as well, taking Kelly with her. Seems as though Grandma got a brooch in the mail thanking her for being such a fan of the show. Clearly an artifact. But this artifact was made, unwittingly by the grandmother.

Artie and Pete go into the show to neutralize the brooch. To not forget who they are (when you enter the telenovella you BELIEVE you’re the character), they hold onto cufflink artifacts. For some reason they can only speak Spanish.

In the telenovella, someone stole the brooch and they now have to find it to neutralize it. But that’s proving a bit challenging since everyone in the telenovella doesn’t really have memory of who they really are until they’re holding the brooch. After much drama (attempting to kill a family member for the family fortune, lovers finding out they’re siblings) and character flip-flopping, Artie finds the brooch and destroys it.

Myka and Pete are caught up in a telenovella, but they need to find the artifact to get things back to normal. (the-trades.com)

Claudia is trying to figure out how to get her sister out of her coma, but Artie sends Jinx with a case to help distract her. The case: a student's vertebrae was spontaneously broken in three places while giving a presentation in class. Seems like while he was giving the presentation, a shadowing figure jumped into his body send him flying and hitting the chalkboard. According to the hospital, he had alcohol poisoning. But the strange thing is, he seemed perfectly normal in class.

They're realizing that students are turning up in different places at once. It's apparently a duplicating artifact. Jinx ends up getting duplicated, but they still have to continue investigating, even with Jinx's more flamboyant side wreaking havoc. However, Claudia manages to get rid of the duplicate twin and neutralize the artifact.

There's a huge problem at hand, though. Claire is missing. Yes, Claire who's supposed to be in a coma.

But how?

The Boondocks (Adult Swim)

"Breaking Grandad"

Imitating "Breaking Bad", the show starts off with Grandad, Huey and Riley in a Winnebago out in the middle of nowhere with two unconscious people with them. They're wearing gas masks protecting them from some very toxic substances.

We are taken back to the beginning of that confusion where Huey is doing his chemistry "project" with "highly volatile material". They're still broke and their financial advisor is not making it any better by telling him they're basically homeless. But even though they're broke, Grandad STILL insists on going on dates. One particular date decides to ditch him when she finds out he wants to do a cheap date because he's strapped for cash.

But Grandad will be on to something when, getting ready for the date, he uses the pink gel Huey created in his chemistry project. The next morning saw him waking up with long flowy hair. He even made next door neighbors Tom and Jasmine try it out, and they had the same results (same results as a chemical relaxer). Little did they know that the pink cream they used was a highly explosive chemical mixture Huey was planning to use in a bomb which would kill Ed Under Jr. so they could get him off their backs.

"You've got to wash that out right now...all of you!"

But Grandad isn't really one for reason and at Riley's suggestion decides to call the product "Bomb Wave Cream". Huey tells them heads could actually explode, but they're not listening. They decided to find a buyer, and found one in "Boss" Wilona. A salon owner and hair product swindler. She isn't too legitimate. Huey is trying to get out of the deal and even tries to warn Wilona of the danger of the gel, but she won't be deterred. The deal is made and when it goes on sale it sells like hot cakes.

Grandad and the boys try to make some money with a serious product – Breaking Bad style. (usnews.com)

Bad news strikes when the product ends up on the news when two women tried to board a plane with the gels and when tested by the authorities, were found to be completely explosive.

“But experts claim a single jar contains enough high explosives to destroy a small plane or a Prius.”

Wilona STILL wants to sell the gel even though it’s now an illegal substance. Huey refuses to make more, but when Grandad decides to make it himself, Huey has to step in. He doesn’t want them going up in flames. Here comes the Breaking Bad parallel. Huey takes them out into the middle of nowhere, a desert and they start to “cook” the hair product Walter and Jesse style (Grandad is in his underwear). Wilona comes out to the desert to get the product, but there are in for a surprise. Wilona plans to take the formula without paying. She holds them up at gunpoint and orders them to teach her how to make the gel. They start mixing under pressure and intentionally put a bad combination together for an explosion. They lock Wilona and her sidekick in the Winnebago and they pass out in the fumes.

Cut to: the beginning of the episode when Grandad is driving the Winnebago in a panic with everybody wearing gas masks.

Riley: “This is all your fault Grandad. If I die, I ain’t never gon’ forgive you.”

Taking a page directly out of Breaking Bad's book, Grandad is standing in the middle of the street in his shirt and underwear with a gun pointed ahead waiting for the sirens he hears in the distance to approach. But they aren't police, they're fire trucks going to the fire that was started at the explosion. In a fit of rage, Grandad starts screaming and when Wilona and her sidekick wake up, they fear his mental state and decide to drive off in the Winnebago. How they decided to get the vehicle moving though created their demise. They hotwired it which was not smart. The sparks from the wires reacted with whatever chemical particles that were in the air and the Winnebago exploded. Grandad, Huey and Riley walked home.

“Eating the Blame”

Boy, Bemidji looks like a really bleak place.

A family is driving into Bemidji. They're running from their lives full of bill collectors and debt. But the car breaks down. Stavros, the father, was only able to put $5 worth of gas in the car. Mind you, it's freezing outside with nothing but snow all around them. He prays for a miracle, and as he's getting up, he sees a red tool sticking up out of the snow. Somehow he thinks it's important enough to go check it out. He pulls it up and checks to see if there's anything else there. A suitcase full of money. His belief in God is cemented. "God is real." As it turns out, this is the Stavros we know today.

Don is playing plumber in Stavros' house. Stavros is trying to figure out how all that blood got into his plumbing.

Gus gets the call about Stavros' dead dog, and is told to go and investigate, because animal control won't be able to. When he pulls up though, he sees Malvo outside. He arrests him and takes him to the station.

Malvo: "You're making a mistake."

Malvo is doing the old mousey/scared routine, even trying to adopt the Minnesota accent. Gus calls Molly to come down to the station to talk to the Malvo. However, the chief wants to go himself, since he says it's his case. Malvo calls Don to pick him up in two hours. During the interrogation with Duluth chief and the Chief from Bemidji, he's pretending to be a Lutheran minister. At first they don't believe his act, but after more acting from Malvo, they buy into it completely. Meanwhile, back in Bemidji, Molly is talking to the motel owner who signed Malvo in some time ago. She gives her his full name – Lorne Malvo. She calls Gus and gives him the info, and as Malvo is walking out of the station (he was released due to lack of evidence and mistaken identity) Gus makes him aware that he knows his name.

Malvo was able to pull the wool over the police's eyes. (www.hitfix.com)

Lester gets back to the scene of the crime to get some of his things, but he's in a rough state. The gunshot wound on his hand is not getting any better and he refuses to get it looked at. Possibly not to raise any eyebrows about the triple murder. But he's in danger of losing his hand if he doesn't deal with it.

Mr. Wrench and Mr. Numbers are eating breakfast and having a heated sign language conversation about how to deal with Lester. Mr. Numbers wants to deal with him right away, but Mr. Wrench wants to talk to him first. "You don't respect me," Mr. Wrench signs (he's deaf). Mr. Numbers agrees to do it Wrench's way. They kidnap him and take him out in the middle of nowhere to eventually bury him in some ice. He however manages to taser Mr. Numbers and run off (Mr. Wrench is deaf and he was busy drilling a hole, so...).

Lester punches a police officer in the face in order to be arrested and carried away from the scene (the officer was writing a ticket for the car the Mr.'s left on the side of the road to bury Lester). His relief is short lived, though. While he's locked up, Numbers and Wrench are put in the same cell with him. They were arrested for fighting each other in a bar. Maybe angry with each other about the botched kidnapping and murder.

And here comes another sign of the plagues for Stavros...locusts. Stavros' supermarket is full of locusts. He gets a call to drop off the money in unmarked bills.

"Remember, God is watching."

The Tonight Show starring Jimmy Fallon (NBC)

Guests: Seth Rogan, Matt Bomer, Coldplay

Jimmy's funny skit, "Ew!" had Set Rogan and Zac Efron as guests. Seeing grown, hairy, muscular men in wigs, dressed as teenage girls with Valley girl accents... kind of unsettling and hilarious. All three got text messages from "James Franco". Stop it! Zach seemed a bit...natural with it.

Coldply performs their latest single, "Magic".

American Idol: Results Show (FOX)

“1 of 4 Voted Off”

America chose who would get to do the hometown visits, cutting four contestants down to three.

Safe: Jena Asciotu, Caleb Johnson, Alex Preston

Eliminated: Jessica Meuse

Hell's Kitchen (FOX)

“12 Chefs Compete”

The chefs' adaptability is challenged. They have to create dishes from one of four trays, each with six ingredients. A new dome will be available at the ring of a bell, and they have to cook whatever is there on the fly. No two chefs could be cooking the same thing. Once again, for the umpteenth time, the Red Team wins (the women). The men (Blue team) get the punishment of doing chores for all 22 wait staff.

Ramsey does a performance evaluation, talking to each chef about their experience in the kitchen. This sends every chef in a panic. “How do you think you're doing?” he asks them. They all have to tell him who's the weakest on their team. The lowest ranking on each team had to compete in a “Cook for your Life” challenge, and the loser had to go home.

Cook for your Life Challenge: Jessica and Rich

Grey's Anatomy (ABC)

“Everything I Try to Do, Nothing Seems to Turn Out Right”

There's news going around that someone will be getting fired. The interns are terrified.

Bailey has to tell a client's parents that she administered treatment to their child without their consent. She told the board (Christina), then the parents. But now legal action follows and her job, along with Stephanie (she knew what Bailey was doing, but failed to report it) is in jeopardy. But she stands strong in her decision. Even though the treatment worked, the parents aren't only filing a malpractice suit, but also assault and battery charges. But maybe she won't have to face those charges – Stephanie decided to fully fall on the sword, taking full blame. She told them she forgot to tell Bailey they wanted to waive the treatment. Wanting to just go home and spend time with their son, they decided to drop the charges.

Jackson is reassures that the patient is fully cured. (spoilertv.com)

Cristina is tasked with doing interviewing candidates for a replacement. Not hers, Dr. Russell's. Meredith is suspicious of Owen's overly supportive reaction to Cristina taking that big job.

"Something big is coming. I can feel it."

Cristina can't seem to find the right person.

Karev, who is now working privately, is being underhanded, basically stealing a patient from the hospital and taking him under his private care. Arizona is obviously upset. It was her patient. All he had to do was ask her for help.

Another big development for Derrick – he met the President and they want him to be a part of the NIH program. He wants the whole family to move to D.C.

Murphy was the intern who got let go.
